EXCERPTS FROM FAMILY PAGE
OF N.Y. TIMES AUG. 16, 1976
"DESPITE OPPOSITION,
JEWISH RITUAL OF THE MIKVAH IS REVITALIZED"

There is probably no Jewish institution more shrouded in mystery, superstition, misunderstanding and stereotype than the mikvah.

Even though it is considered so crucial to the Jewish community that the construction of the ritual bath takes priority over that of the synagogue, the mikvah has been regarded variously as archaic, unnecessary, irrelevant and even absurd. Now, without fanfare or theological pressure, the mikvah and its demanding code of behavior, known as the laws of family purity, are undergoing a renaissance.

The resurgence cannot be documented by numbers, for attendance is considered a private matter. But it is apparent in the proliferation of seminars and lectures on the subject and in tours of mikva'ot (the plural of mikvah). The National Conference of Synagogue Youth of the U.O.J.C.A. has received sufficient demand for information to publish a book entitled the "Waters of Eden." Old mikva'ot in the cities are being renovated, new ones in the suburbs have been built or are on the drawing boards.

Rabbis and Jewish scholars attribute the trend to a variety of factors. But mainly they agree that it is indivisible from the general intensification of Judaism in this country, also evident in increasing numbers of day schools and yeshivas and the strengthening of Jewish education for young girls. In addition, it stems from increased pride in a disillusioned young generation for new moral standards.

Basically, the code of family purity mandates that a couple refrain from all physical contact (even holding hands) from the onset of the wife's menstrual period until seven days after the bleeding has ceased. Then she is to bathe her body and hair thoroughly, cut her fingernails so that they cannot hide a vestige of dirt and remove all foreign objects such as jewelry and bandages.

Finally, she must totally immerse herself three times in the mikvah while reciting a special prayer. The mikvah, itself built to rigid specifications, looks like a deep square bathtub with steps and contains water about four feet deep from a natural source such as rain. With immersion, the woman is considered purified and renewed.

She is also commanded to go to the mikvah just prior to her marriage, after miscarriage and after giving birth as well as on all occasions of blood appearance.

The mikvah is also crucial to the conversion process. In addition, Jews are commanded to submerge certain utensils in mikvahs reserved for that purpose.

Ritual cleanliness, Biblically ordained, Jewish scholars explain, has no connection with physical uncleanness, and there is no English word that precisely captures its meaning. The significance underlying the clearly delineated rules also resists easy explanation, but it is said that the rite is intended to give G-d's sanctification to the physical relationship and to elevate the sexual act to a holy plane. In fact, many of the women who commit themselves to the ancient decree regard it as insurance against marital boredom and dissension, a benefit originally described in the Talmud.

Shellee Berman, of the faculty at Yeshiva University, observed, "Personally I see this as an affirmation of my own separation and uniqueness; it allows me to be an individual and a partner."

Attendance at the mikvah would not be growing if it were not for its attraction to a breed of young women brought up outside the strict confines of orthodoxy. And no one more clearly personifies the new mikvah adherent than Linda N., a 32-year-old mother of three.

Mrs. N. and her husband were both raised in liberal homes. They spent a good part of their 13-year marriage "searching for a purpose," devoting themselves to the peace ecology movements.

"According to the American dream we should have been happy, but still we felt something was missing," she recalled.

By chance they happened to hear Esther Jungreis, the charismatic founder of Hineni, a Jewish educational movement. "Finally all our questions were answered," she said. "We drove two hours each way every week to attend her class, and two years ago we went to Israel with her and for the first time lived a Jewish life. When I went to the mikvah in Jerusalem, I felt as if I had been reborn, as if I were a new bride...During the time of physical separation we have strengthened the other aspects of our relationship. Its benefits are uncountable."

Mrs. G. had had a hysterectomy before she went for the first time (women who no longer menstruate go only once afterwards). But when faced with the prospect of serious surgery last year, she said, "I felt the need to turn to G-d. And I felt that I had to go to the mikvah just once for all the times I was remiss in my life."

Just as several newlywed women interviewed had said, she recalled: "When I walked out, I felt purified and sanctified. I have had a wonderful marriage, I have had excitement and glamour, but I wish I had observed this law. It is observance of G-d's will."

YAMIM TOVIM AT THE WSIS

Congregational Citations of Merit and Thanks to our congregants who assisted at our High Holy Day services in so many ways. Highlights of the services were: the shofar sounded by Nash Aussenberg and Sheldon Schneider in the main sanctuary and at the auxiliary services, respectively; Cantorial renditions by Bruno Bayer and Benjamin Etzkowitz; Torah readings at auxiliary service by Robert Swartz; and ushers Dr. Frank E. Fink, Leon Herman, Irving Marks, Benjamin Miller, Estelle Lipson and Rivka Grossinger.

Our Succah again this year rated among the finest in our community for its inspiring beauty. Congregational gratitude to the Mr. & Mrs. League Succah Committee under the co-chairmanship of Mrs. Maurice Goodgold and Mrs. Max Schwarz, and to their dedicated co-workers: Mr. & Mrs. Gerard Benjamin, Mr. & Mrs. Leon Bitner, Mr. & Mrs. Alfred Florsheim, Mrs. Samuel Gursky, Mr. & Mrs. Freddy Heiser, Mr. & Mrs. Joe Klein, Mrs. O. dren in Israel."

We were happy to host the Simchas Torah weekend of "Yavneh" (National Religious Jewish Students) in our community. The young people had their meals in our ballroom and joined us at our services. Their youthful enthusiasm at the Hakafos Saturday night was contagious.

The Simchas Torah reception for the Congregational Family at the home of our Rabbi Dr. and Mrs. O. Asher Reichel, was another highlight of the Yom Tov.

The celebrations came to an impressive conclusion on Shabbos Braishis when our Simchas Torah Chassanim, Mr. & Mrs. Bruno Bayer, Mr. & Mrs. Kurt Benjamin, and Mr. Harold Guttman were the hosts at the festive Seudah Shlishis.

We hope to see ever growing numbers of our congregants at our northcoming events which are announced in the columns of the REVIEW.
